With a background and degree in Art, I found myself drawn to serving the disability community after my daughter was born with medical and cognitive disabilities. Over the years, I've volunteered with various disability-related non-profits, accumulating over 12 years of experience with CDCS. My genuine love for helping others in similar situations shines through in my work. In my rare moments of free time, I indulge in creative pursuits, from baking to painting, while also enjoying the company of my two adorable French Bulldogs and tending to my extensive plant collection. It's a busy life, but finding balance between my interests and responsibilities brings me joy.
